Brand Names Have Appeal

A recent survey by the United States Department of Agriculture showed that most shoppers buy foods because of brand names, not because of price. The survey divided shoppers into three groups. The largest group, Group 1, were those shoppers who buy their favorite brands even though they cost more than other brands. Group 1 comprised 39 percent of the survey population and were housewives who liked to shop for food and experiment with new and different products and recipes. The people in this group spent more time preparing foods because they liked to cook.

Group II made up of 32 percent of the population, and the housewives in this group were mainly concerned with cost and efficient use of time. They found shopping a chore and devoted as little time and effort to shopping as possible. The women in this group also bought extra food at low prices in order to save time and money.

The third group was the smallest, and comprised 18 percent of the sample population. The housewives in this group carefully planned menus in advance, made shopping lists, took advantage of specials, compared prices between brands, and used the information on the labels.

Compare your shopping habits with these three groups. Which group would you fit into?

A GIFT FOR MOTHER

Mothers are called "mere" in French, "madre" in Spanish, and "mor" in Danish, but no matter what they're called, they deserve the finest of gifts for Mother's Day.

Sure mother-pleasers are Collector's Plates from Svend Jensen of Denmark. Extraordinary concern for quality and detail is evident in each of the limited edition Mother's Day Plates. The series, begun in 1970, is delicately painted in classic Copenhagen blue tones on a bas relief design.

Each 7 1/2-inch plate undergoes 42 hand operations by 15 craftsmen and takes 22 1/2 days to complete. No two finished plates are exactly alike, for each is painted entirely by hand. When the edition is closed, the original mold is destroyed so no more can ever be fired.

Called "Dreams," the 1978 edition depicts a boy intent on his toy sailboat. It was created by Danish artist Mads Stage, renowned for his sensitive portrayal of children. Likely to inspire Mother with warm feelings 365 days a year, the plate is available in fine jewelry, gift and department stores throughout the country.

SPICES AND HERBS ADD GLAMOUR TO EVERYDAY MEALS

Spice -- the word stirs visions of high adventure, camel caravans loaded with spices plodding across hot sands, tiny ships braving storms and unknown seas. Even Columbus' discovery of America was a result of man's desire for spices.

Today, the herbs and spices for which men have reached down through the centuries are to be found no farther away than our gardens or the nearest supermarket. At least a few seasonings are to be found in practically every home in America, and more are being added every day. The increased use of spices and herbs is one of the most radical changes in American cooking in the past 50 years. No longer is the imaginative cook satisfied with staple spices like pepper, cloves, cinnamon and nutmeg. Now she wants to experiment with the lesser-known varieties.

Before we talk about spices and call them by name, why are some of the aromatic seasonings called spices and some herbs? What is the difference?

Spices are parts of plants which usually grow in the Tropics -- "parts" meaning bark, dried leaves, seeds, stamen, shells, or any other aromatic part suitable for seasoning or preserving. Exceptions are peppers -- cayenne, red, whole chili peppers and paprika. All are prepared from the dried pod of different varieties of peppers and are grown in almost every country in the world. They have no connection with white or black pepper. Black pepper is the dried berry of a tropical climber; white pepper is obtained by removing the outer skin of the berry and using the inner portion, which is white.

Herbs, on the other hand, are leaves of Temperate Zone plants. There are two groups -- "fine" herbs, delicate in flavor, such as basil, chervil, rosemary and thyme; and "robust" herbs stronger in flavor like mint, savory, dill and sage. Herbs may be used fresh or dried. When used fresh, they should be cut in the morning before the sun dries their flavorful oils.

Let Spices Save Time and Labor. Among the newer developments in the spice industry are dehydrated vegetable seasonings, including various forms of onion, garlic, sweet peppers, celery, mint, parsley and mixed vegetables. These are labor savers when a recipe calls for the seasonings quality of any of these vegetables. If the recipe includes much liquid (i.e. stews and sauces) and the flakes are to remain in the liquid for several minutes before the dish is served, it may not be necessary even to rehydrate them. In the case of instant minced onion and parsley flakes, they will rehydrate sufficiently in about five minutes. For sweet pepper flakes, clery flakes and mixed vegetable flakes, you should allow about 20 minutes for rehydration (either before or during cooking). If, as in the case of a salad or garnish, rehydration is indicated, use equal parts of lukes and water for onion and parsley. For celery and sweet pepper, use twice the amount of water as flakes and when rehydrated, strain off the excess water.

One part of instant minced onion or parsley flakes is equal to about four parts of the raw product sin seasoning strength. One part of celery or sweet pepper flakes is equivalent to about two parts of the raw vegetable.

RECIPE OF THE WEEK
Martha's Fruit Muffins

½ cup shortening
½ cup sugar
2 well beaten eggs
½ teas. vanilla
1¾ cup flour (self-rising)
½ cup milk

Fruit Filling:

Thoroughly cream shortening and sugar. Add eggs and vanilla, beat well. Add flour alternately with milk. Beat thoroughly. Fill greased muffin pans half full. Drop teaspoon of Fruit Filling into each. Bake in moderate oven 375°F. for 20 minutes. Makes 1 dozen.

For Fruit Filling I am using home made grape jelly. Many thanks to Martha Haley, a fourth grade 4-H'ers for sharing this recipe. Martha won 1st Place in the county and area demonstration contests with this good recipe and her excellent demonstration techniques.

Junk Car Eyesore Can Be A Community Opportunity

RICHMOND - "Abandoned Cars - - - - Eyesore or Opportunity" is the title of an attractive little brochure just released by Keep Virginia Beautiful outlining the junk car problem in Virginia. Ways that private groups and government bodies can work together to collect and recycle these old cars are suggested.

"There are plenty of these hulks out there and their number can grow alarmingly if we don't continue to remove them", the publication points out. "It is estimated more than 250,000 cars are scrapped annually in Virginia. Of course, most of these find their way to salvage yards, but as many as 50,000 could be added to the abandoned car problem each year."

The state has a "bounty" law which provides financial aid to communities that want to clean up old cars. For each car a

Farm Bureau Plans Spring Meeting

The Appomattox County Farm Bureau will hold its Spring Dinner Meeting May 27th at the Appomattox County High School.

The Women's Committee will be sponsoring the Miss Appomattox County Farm Bureau contest at this meeting. If you young ladies are interested, please contact Margaret Glover, 248-6425.

If abandoned cars (scrap processors also buy old stoves, refrigerators and other metal products) are a problem in your community, here are some things the brochure says you can do.

1. Discuss it with your local government representatives. They may have an ongoing program in which you can help.

2. Have your group make a survey of the number and location of cars that appear to be abandoned and try to determine if the owner is known.

3. Contact Keep Virginia Beautiful for guides on how to conduct a collection program. KVB can probably help arrange a siminar in your locality to bring together the government and business representatives who can make your program work.

Copies of the brochure are available without cost by contacting Keep Virginia Beautiful, 110 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Virginia, 23219. Telephone (804) 648-3776.

THE WEEK OF MAY 8-12 IS METRIC WEEK

On May 11, 1978, Miss Jordan's sixth grade class of Pamplin Elementary School will be having a Metric Carnival on the school grounds.

They will be putting the carnival on for the entire school to win prizes and have fun at the same time.

Prizes will be given to each grade in the eleven events and then to the best person in the school for each event.

The events will include a Treasure Hunt, races, throwing, guessing metric units such as grams, centimeters, square meters, an obstacle course, and others.
